

The Paper Craft Tutor.com

Welcome to my world

Sunday, December 16, 2018

Good morning everyone,

The Christmas Millionaires shortbread is all done but still in the baking tins while I decide how I am going to package it.

I did stay up late to make some gift bags last night; seven for the girls at the dentist office, though had to leave out the calendars, & a further four for the shortbread itself.

But I have yet to decide how to wrap the shortbread inside of the bags... cellophane or foil, cut up or as a block? I need to get that sorted before I begin the weekend housework today.

Although I have been getting back into my work ethic somewhat in the past couple of weeks I have not worked up any more Christmas stuff, that page has not been getting so much footfall of late so I expect you are all done with your Christmas cards now.

Ergo apart from the one I have as the bonus sheet for today there are no more Christmas sheets to upload.

Image 1: The last six sheets of the current paper collection coming up & I have to say I will be happy to finish it up as I have two more ready on file for you.

Image 2: A duo of little layered toppers now; this was such a cute scene that I couldn't help thinking that they would make really sweet Valentine cards?

Image 3: I haven't created much for the Men's page for a while with having so much Christmas designs to prepare, so I got a few new ones done in the week. I think this could make a perfect image for a masculine winter birthday card.

Image 4: The first of two oval decoupages that I have planned for you in the coming week, this one is a little girl playing with her kitten.

In the latest designs I have kept it really simple for you & so there is no final individually cut out image.

Image 5: Something else I haven't prepared new stuff for in a long while is the design sets page. So I have done a bunch of new designs for that page too & this is one of those. They are all based on striped backgrounds but this one is different from the others because of the images.

I came across them in one of my resource files, but have ignored them up until now as they are page headers from old books. But when I imported a couple into the design software I saw the potential & came up with this design set.

Image 6: Some lovely prints of dogs for you now, I did a whole bunch of these two – well four or five anyhow – & am planning on creating some featuring cats too. So here you have four framed images to use as toppers on your projects.

Image 7: The second oval decoupage for the coming week is this image from the Vintage fashion file.

If I went back into the archive files I could make life easier for myself as there will be the full decoupage sheet of this image in there somewhere, but it is quicker to cut out the final layer again than to find it in the archives!

Image 8: A new card kit design for you now & after I had completed the decoupage layers I got to playing with the flowers & came up with a couple more sheets using those, which I will upload for you in the coming weeks.

Image 9: The bonus sheet for this morning is the final Christmas sheet that I had on file (worth uploading anyhow)!

It features some children building a snowman & I have created decoupage layers for you to build up onto your project.

So these are the sheets I am planning to upload in the coming week & I hope that there is something amongst them that you like.

Rita x