

The Paper Craft Tutor.com

Welcome to my world

Sunday, January 6, 2019

Good morning everyone,

I have had another week filled with craft, which I can't tell you how happy that makes me feel, particularly after the longest 'dry spell' in history!

Creativity is part of my make up so if I am not crafting I somehow feel that there is something missing from my life.

They are all shaker cards right now as I am just having so much fun playing with the Fuse tool, & I am also really enjoying bulking up my sequin stash to put inside them all too.

Waiting for two orders to arrive right now that include tons more sequins, one from The Works & another from Hobbycraft - though both also include dies of course!

I am contemplating a London trip at some point, possibly in the first half of the year? It has been more than two years since my last visit & as you know, I simply love being there; it feels like I have come home.

Anyhow, down to business:

Image 1: The current Pansy paper collection is about half way through, so another couple of weeks left to go with that yet.

Image 2: I haven't done very many card kits of late so I came up with this design in the week for you, it turned out rather pretty with that piece of a previous paper collection in the background as well as some stripes.

Image 3: I wanted to create a project for those of you who have the Fuse tool – or perhaps that gadget I bought from the internet - as Valentine's Day is the next diary event I thought a heart shaped shaker was perfect.

But if you don't have either tool you just need to make the shaker in the usual way with acetate & some double sided foam tape & that will work just as well.

Image 4: The first of two oval decoupages that I have lined up for you this week, both being the simplified versions without the intricate final layer, so they are super easy to cut out!

This first one I have for you is a little boy playing with a baby sibling – in those days it must have been really difficult to tell the difference between boys & girls as all babies wore 'dresses'!

Image 5: I am still on a mission to refresh those pages that have been neglected in the build up to Christmas, so here is another decoupage design for the men's page. Again it is one of the series of vintage American university posters.

Image 6: I began uploading this series a couple of weeks ago, but then forgot to include one in last week's line up!

But now there will be the full twelve in this series of these deep decoupages, because I created another one in the interim!

Image 7: Almost done with the canine toppers as there is only one more on file, but I have begun work on the feline equivalent, unfortunately I just don't have many source images of cats to chose from.

Image 8: The second of the oval decoupages I have planned for the coming week & when I came across this scenic image I just knew it would work perfectly with this format.

Again this is one of the simplified versions, which in fact is why it worked out so well.

Image 9: The bonus sheet for this morning is a new kids design featuring this cute little hedgehog.

I had to create a scene for him to make the image work & then dismantled it to create the layers for you to build up a 3D topper for the front of your project.

Catch up with you all later in the day.

Rita x