

The Paper Craft Tutor.com

Welcome to my world

Sunday, August 11, 2019

Good morning to you all,

I have probably spent more time working than anything else in the past week so the files are looking particularly healthy, but I have also squeezed in a little crafting too, so a few new pictures for the August section of gallery.

I had another reorganisation session in the craft zone yesterday & I am quite happy with my efforts thus far. Again I have moved the stuff that I seem to be using more frequently closer to hand, but one thing that never gets moved are my collection of dies, which sit to the left & right directly in front of me, everything else gets moved around those!

Image 1: I have been trying to work out how to produce gold embossing in the design software for as long as I can remember & recently stumbled across the answer, & now I just need to remember how I did it! Anyhow, I printed off a sheet to see how it looked & was thrilled with the results so got to work to create an entire paper collection which I am launching this week.

Image 2: I have uploaded project notes on how to create these cute little boxes, but then I had a request for a template, so here it is. As always there are two formats of the same template, one for standard A4 printers & the other for letter sized one's – that way the templates shouldn't get distorted.

Image 3: The first of the oval bird decoupages for this week, I am running out of adjectives to describe the artists work, but I am sure you have figured out just how much I admire the artists work by now!

Image 4: The final gold framed Santa card kit for you now & I hope that, if you are selling your work, that these cards will make an easy profit for you.

Image 5: I constantly endeavour to come up with new formats & this is one of those, but I only produced two so if you would like more, drop me a line. So this one features this lovely little snowy image for which I created a bespoke Christmas greeting frame, & then layered up onto coordinating papers.

Image 6: A second template for the coming week is this really cute little handbag which holds a single tea light or a chocolate truffle etc. They are rather fun to make & would look gorgeous cut from mirri card & used as tree decorations or as part of an advent calendar perhaps?

Images 7 & 8: The final card kit from the Perfectly Peachy file now along with its own backing paper, so you can also use this as a layered topper on a larger card?

Image 9: The second oval decoupage from the British bird file for the coming week, I particularly like this one as until last year, when the magpies finally chased them away, I always had a nesting pair of these beautiful birds up in the big tree out back every spring.

Image 10 – the bonus sheet: Just to round off the gold framed Santa card kit series; I actually created this sheet of four toppers prior to the card kits & it is where the idea for them sprung from, so I thought you might like to have them to possibly decorate your box to hold all of the card in?

Rita x

